

Hot Plants for Cooler Temps

November has arrived, and we're feeling the chill! While the recent heavy rains have soaked away some of the summer drought, the colder and wetter conditions present fresh challenges (and delights!) for seasonal gardeners and landscapers, from changing water needs to prepping for frost to choosing new fall flowers.

This month, we're all about helping you ease the transition into late Autumn. If you're looking for a fresh, bright look for your transitional garden, check out Nursery News for some suggestions of blooming plants; for help with succulents and other gardening, check out Garden & Landscaping, where we have some handy tips for caring for low-water plants through fall and prepping your landscape for spring.

November is also ideal planting time for California natives (such as the beautifully flowering Erigeron glaucus, pictured above)! We have extensive resources for natives that we've been working on for many years, both in stock and for preorder. We invite you to come view our selection in the nursery, which is just the tip of the iceberg - you may call or email us any time to inquire about additional inventory through our extensive network of growers.

We wish you a bountiful Autumn. Please call or email us any time for your planting needs.

Thank you,
Jane

TIPS FOR AUTUMN SUCCULENT CARE

You might think of succulents as the lowest-maintenance plants in your garden. However, as the weather starts to turn cool and the first frost approaches, new challenges arise: you may notice that your succulents' water needs change, flowers dry up, and some may even start to show signs of rot with the increasing rains this time of year. If you want to keep your succulents looking fresh through the autumn and winter, what can you do? Fortunately, Succulent Gardens offers a helpful guide to caring for your succulents through fall and winter. Check it out via the link below!
